FELLOWS PROGRAM

The American BioDefense Institute Fellows Program is an “invite-only” Think Tank. It extends invitations to the leading experts in biosecurity. Our Fellows regularly brief the United States Congress and Federal Agencies on the evolving threats, solutions, and strategies in biodefense. They are comprised of some of the country’s leading experts in the fields of medicine, biology, and genetics, sharing a commitment to advancing our nation’s biosecurity.

American BioDefense Institute’s Fellow Program

ABI Fellows have a deep background in pandemic relief and biodefense, with expertise derived from both academia and the private sector. Their primary responsibility is to share their knowledge with the Congressional and Federal Agency community by contributing research, expert opinion, and developing strategies to keep improving the nation’s biodefense capabilities. Through research contributions, briefings, press conferences, virtual summits, Congressional meet and greets at the Capitol, media engagements, and public speaking engagements, we can communicate critical strategies and solutions with vital implications for our National Security and the long-term stability of our economy.

Our extensive relationships allow us to promote our subject matter experts through a variety of promoted media interactions such as podcasts, television, radio, journalist inquires, virtual summits, industry journals, and more. ABI makes sure that our Fellows’ expert opinion reaches both the key policymakers and the public to inform and advise them on actionable steps, tools, and procedures to bring both short and long-term improvement to our nation’s biodefense.
